Unit #3: The Structure of American Federal Government

Content Area: Social Studies
Course(s): Political Science
Time Period: Second Marking period

Length: 5 Weeks Status: Published

Unit Overview

The Constitution specifies a specific structure of how the government is organized, how to select officials and procedures on how the federal government makes decisions and relates to state governments. The rules governing the federal government have consequences for the politics of the United States including the obstacles for creating new legislation in favor of status quo. However, this source of frustration also creates a system which is flexible to meet the countries changing needs.

- Intro: Share with the class the lyrics for "Three-Ring Government," from "Schoolhouse Rock," created by American Broadcasting Companies, Inc. Discuss the lyrics. What do they explain about the three branches of our government? What are the three branches? What is the main responsibility of each? Students will then work with historical documents to check branches for abuse of power: Read the following statements to the class, one at a time:
- I am the President; I can declare war on Lower Slobovia.
- I am a Judge; I can make any decision I want.
- I am a Senator; I can help write and pass any law I want.
- I am the President of the United States; I can veto any law passed by Congress.
- I am the President of the United States; I can do anything I want.
- I am the President of the United States; I can make a treaty with Upper Slobovia.
- We're the Supreme Court; we'll be ruling on every law for years.
- After each statement is read, student groups should select one document they believe exemplifies how the particular action could be checked. They should also decide which category on the board best characterizes this particular check on the system. When the groups have had enough time, the teacher declares, "Show," at which time every group holds up the document it chose.

- Students will research based on their address who their state representatives are and who the NJ State Senators. Students will research the last year and present any stories or laws they recently voted on and their thoughts about it
- Research the most recent Supreme Justice Appointments and present there rise to the supreme court
