Enduring Understandings

Reading

Readers use strategies to help them understand what is read.
The goal of reading nonfiction text is to find and learn new information.
Readers read nonfiction or informational text to find information and answer questions about the world around them.
Writing
Writers use all they have learned to create new pieces.
Writers capture their readers in various ways.
Writers always keep their audience in mind no matter what genre they are writing.

Essential Questions

Reading

How will asking questions about key details in a text help the reader to understand it better?

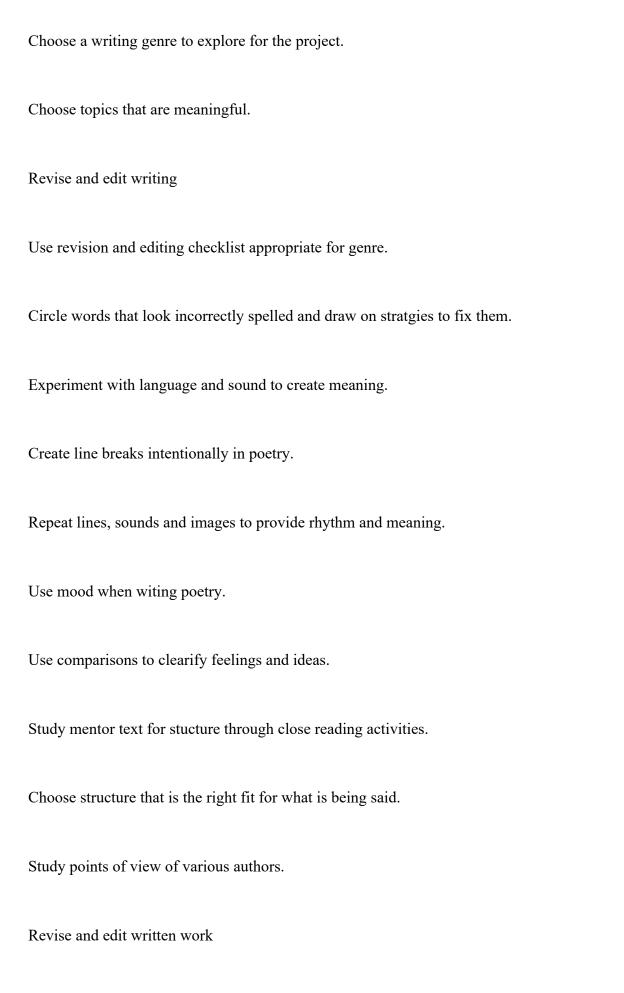

Every genre incorporates strong voice. work choice, beginings and endings.

What is the main idea of the text and what are the details that support it?
How will making connections between individuals, events, ideas, or pieces of information in a text lead to better understanding?

Skills
Reading
Monitor for sense by rereading the story and asking what is happening in each part. \Box Monitor for sense by rereading the story aloud.
Make meaning of longer text by retelling a story using first, second, then, etc.

Make mental pictures that include characters, actions, and setting.
Practice stopping after reading several pages or chapters and asking the question, "What is happening with my character so far in the book?"
Use graphic organizers, such as a T-chart, to keep track of thoughts.
Use post-its to mark sections where the character surprises, changes, or reminds them of themselves, or connects with a different book.
Identify the setting by paying close attention to place words that tell the reader where the action is happening; notice when a scene changes by paying attention to the detail, and how the setting usually stays the same.
Predict or expect problems by noticing clues in a story.
Identify problem/solution by putting a post-it on the page when the problem is identified and one on the page where the problem is resolved.
Notice time change by paying close attention to illustrations that show change (from day to night) and noticing language that authors use to tell the reader of changes.
Reading Foundations
Identify textual purpose and understanding
Identify oral reading with accuracy, appropriate rate, and expression on successive readings
Identify rereading as a strategy when confirming or self-correcting words

Understand how context can help to confirm or self-correct word recognition
Understand how to confirm or self-correct using context
Determine the purpose for reading on-level text
Apply reading strategies for accuracy, rate, and expression
Confirm or self-correct word recognition and word understanding
Read on-level text fluently and accurately
Reread with fluency as necessary
