Topic - Unit Description

In Unit 8, only minimal additions are made in presenting new skills so as to leave teachers room to go back and reinforce skills that students need more work on. The irony is presented in Unit 8, so introducing students to satire and other more subtle forms of irony is advisable, if teachers have not done so already. Modifiers and parentheticals are also introduced as stylistic elements that will create clarity. Culminating writing assignment: open argument

Enduring Understandings

- Writers may make comparisons (e.g., similes, metaphors, analogies, or anecdotes) in an attempt to relate to an audience. Effective comparisons must be shared and understood by the audience to advance the writer's purpose.
- Writers' choices regarding syntax and diction influence how the writer is perceived by an audience and may influence the degree to which an audience accepts an argument.
- Word choice may reflect writers' biases and may affect their credibility with a particular audience.
- Because audiences are unique and dynamic, writers must consider the perspectives, contexts, and needs of the intended audience when making choices of evidence, organization, and language in an argument.
- A writer's style is made up of the mix of word choice, syntax, and conventions employed by that writer.
- Writers may signal a complex or ironic perspective through stylistic choices. Irony may emerge from the differences between an argument and the readers' expectations or values.
- Modifiers—including words, phrases, or clauses—qualify, clarify, or specify information about the thing with which they are associated. To reduce ambiguity, modifiers should be placed closest to the word, phrase, or clause that they are meant to modify.
- Parenthetical elements—though not essential to understanding what they are describing—interrupt sentences to provide additional information that may address an audience's needs and/or advance a writer's purpose
