Enduring Understandings

Posters have been used as marketing devices for over two hundred years. They have been displayed in public places all over the world.

Posters are made to be visually striking, to attract the attention of the viewer and entice us to attend specific events or purchase particular products or services.

Travel poster advertising or proposing a travel destination, through artistic articulation was a successful source of travel marketing in the 1920s and 30s.

Railways, special events or activities, swanky ocean liners like the Titanic, were subjects of vibrant visual media, ushering a new era of excitement about the adventures of travel, channeled through the language of design.

Essential Questions

How has the industry of travel changed since the 1920s?

How has the Internet impacted the marketing and sale of travel?

What is the difference between the artistic articulation of travel displayed in vintage posters and the contemporary advertising layouts that you see today?

What is the advantage to creating an illustration or design versus using a photograph of the same place for marketing travel?
