Course(s): School Newspaper
Time Period: May
Length: 6 weeks
Status: Published

Transfer

---

Unit Goals:

- Incorporate verifiable research and accurate reporting into all writing
- Compose using factual accuracy, proper grammar, and appropriate and intriguing language
- Understand the functions of an editorial

Enduring Understandings

By the end of this unit students will understand that...

- Not all newspaper writing is objective.
- The purpose of an editorial is TO EXPRESS a point of view, and often, to PERSUADE others' agreement.
- In an editorial, reasons grounded in fact are presented in order to express opinions and persuade.
- "Columns" and "Reviews" are other types of newspaper writing that are not objective.
- The editorialist, columnist, reviewer, and all other journalists who express opinion rather than reporting news must maintain high standards of accuracy and integrity in order to cultivate a respected reputation.

Essential Questions

By the end of the unit students will be able to answer...

- When is newspaper writing NOT objective?
- Why are editorials a vital part of democratic society, and a respected news publication?
- Who writes editorials? Why do we trust some editorials but not others?
