Essential Questions

- What responsibility do more stable nations have to look after those adversely affected by living in a less stable nation?
- What role do NGOs play in alleviating human suffering during migration?
- What prejudices do we have that block empathy with others?
- What duty is required of Americans to help migrant populations?
- Why does conflict occur?
- What does cultural diversity offer a society?
- What are the causes of human migration?
- What effect does migration have on the country of entry?

Application of Knowledge: Students will know that...

- A nation or region lacking stability is a primary push factor for migrants leaving a country
- Economic disparity is a primary pull factor for migrants coming to a country
- Humans have been migrating from place to place since their beginning
- Migrants who come to a country for work send money home in the form of "remittances," which is an important part of the economy of many developing countries
- Seasonal migration, urbanization, and suburbanization are some of the types of movements that can occur within a country

Application of Skills: Students will be able to...

- Discuss causes for migration
- Research and talk intelligently about current migration trends or crises

Assessments

- Create a news report on a current migration trend or crisis, including causes, policies, and "interviews" with migrants
- Informal observations of group discussions on book, public policy
- Graphic organizer on what causes people to migrate
- Information from this unit will be included on a locally developed, mid-year or end of course benchmark assessment that may take the form of a test, performance based project, or other summative

Suggested Activities

- Speak with migrant families about their experiences, report findings to the class
- Read A Long Walk to Water, paired with journal reflections on children's experiences
- Read and discuss policy documents and news articles
- Watch a documentary on a contemporary migration issue
- Take part in public debates on migration issues
