Essential Questions

- At what point does one person's freedom infringe upon another person's rights?
- What system of government best represents all types of people?
- What ideals of civic life are shared by Romans and Americans?
- How much can individuals be trusted with power?
- What checks and balances are effective at curbing abuse of power?
- What cultural values can be the best checks on power?

Application of Knowledge: Students will know that...

- Consuls and praetors held "imperium," which gave them authority to lead Rome's armies
- Councils of citizens in Rome created laws and granted powers to magistrates
- During the Imperial period, the magistrates, councils, and Senate became purely symbolic legislative bodies
- Roman politicians must follow the "cursus honorum" to advance to each political office
- The Dictator was appointed in a time of crisis and held absolute "imperium," but was expected to forfeit power at the end of the crisis
- The government of the Roman Republic had several checks and balances in place to prevent corruption
- The Roman Kings traditionally numbered seven and were credited with many traditional practices
- The Roman Republic's reliance on tradition to hold leaders in check brought it to an end
- The Roman Senate served as an advisory body and as a guardian of Roman traditions

Application of Skills: Students will be able to...

- Compare Roman government to that of the United States
- Compare speeches of ancient politicians to modern ones
- Evaluate a government's stability and fairness to its people
- Interpret historical patterns to learn lessons for the modern world

Assessments

- Essay comparing and contrasting ancient and modern political speeches
- Quiz over vocabulary relating to Republic (magistrates, important figures, etc.)
- Posters/infographics displaying accomplishments and legends about each of the seven kings of Rome
- Graphic organizers demonstrating responsibilities, checks and balances, and traditions of each office in the Republic

- Information from this unit will be included on a locally developed, end of course benchmark assessment that may take the form of a test, performance based project, or other summative assessment.

Suggested Activities
