Unit Overview

In this unit, students will learn the terms for family members and names of various occupations and explore the culture and traditions of Latino families. It will also focus on expanding the students knowledge of adjectives by introducing them to the descriptive and possessive form. With this unit students will continue to practice conjugating previous learned verbs as well as two new "go" verbs. Finally, this unit will teach students to use idea maps when writing and teach them to write a friendly letter.

Essential Questions

- How are a person's surnames determined in the Spanish-speaking world?
- How do the roles of families and communities differ in societies around the world?
- How do you describe your family and family members?
- How do you describe your family and family members?
- What is a family and what makes up a family?

Application of Knowledge and Skills...

Activities

---

- Students will create a voicethread (www.voicethread.com) about their families to share with the class.
- Using the teachers family as a guideline, ask students questions pertaining to the relationships between two people. Help students identify the relationships between members. Entire conversation should be done in target language.
- Have students create a celebrity family tree to present to the family.
- As a TPR activity, create a "live" family tree by assigning students different roles as family members. Have the students physically get in the form of the family tree as if it was written on paper.
- Give students 5 sets of pictures, ask them to work in partners to create sentences for each picture. Students will then share their sentences with the class.
- Ask students to bring in a family-related photo of their own or a photo from the Internet or a magazine. Have them write a fill-in-the-blank sentence to go with the picture. Working in pairs, have them guess what is happening in each other's photo and complete the sentence.
- Students will watch the Fotonovela Un domingo en familia, as they watch the students will raise their right hand when they hear family-related vocabulary and their left hand when they hear vocabulary pertaining to the professions.
- Have students translate the written Fotonovela to English for comprehension.
- Have groups of three interview each other about their families. Assign one person as the interviewer, one the interviewee, and the third person as the note-taker. At the three minute interval have the students switch roles until they are all done.

- Give students a random nationality card then have them circulate the classroom interviewing the other students until they find the one that shares their nationality.
- Students will write brief descriptions of themselves: where they are from, their personalities and what they look like. Teacher will collect the descriptions and share them with the class while students try to guess which classmate is being described.
- In pairs, students will take turns making true/false statements about the locations of objects in the classroom using the possessive adjectives. The other student will identify if they are true or false.
- Have students write a brief e-mail describing their family. They should include names and relationships, physical characteristics and hobbies and interests. The students will then share the e-mail with the class.

Activities to Differentiate Instruction

- Ask native speakers to tell the class any other terms that they use to refer to members of their families including terms of endearment.
- When completing true or false activities from the textbook have students correct the false to make them true.
- Have students research a famous English-speaking family (such as the Kennedys) and write a brief comparison with the Spanish Royal Family.
- When completing a writing assignment students will use an idea map to gather their thoughts.
- Choice of working alone or in partners.
- Provide skeleton notes for presentations.
- Provide opportunities for students to work together in teacher designed groups.
- Provide tiered activities and homework.
- Assign Spanish "experts" to assist with each lesson.
