Activities

- Discuss that near people in a picture are the larger figures and are generally positioned toward the bottom of the picture
- Discuss how overlapping figures allow a viewer to perceive one person as closer than another
- Review prior knowledge about van Gogh
- Read Camille and the Sunflowers to the class
- Show van Gogh's Sunflowers series; discuss why he painted this subject
- Discuss how still-life pictures are excellent examples of perspective paintings
- Demonstrate how to begin drawing a still-life picture
- Demonstrate how to use oil pastels, emphasizing how short strokes, convey a sense of energy

Activities to Differentiate Instruction

- As students create the "Stage Scene" picture, they will overlap a minimum of three characters/objects to create an illusion of near and far, advanced students will include a fourth level of characters/objects
- In the "Sunflowers Still-Life", students will include between varying numbers of sunflowers in their vase
- Students work at their own pace/teacher-reduced project expectations
- Review and repeat instructions
- Use proximity control
- Incorporate frequent modeling and prompting
- Use visuals, when possible, to accompany instructions
- Preferential seating

Integrated/Cross-Disciplinary Instruction

In social studies classes, students will learn how African-American leaders, such as Martin Luther King, Jr., protested for better treatment of African-Americans in the USA during the 1950s and 1960s. Discuss with the students that artist, Jacob Lawrence always portrayed African-American subjects in his paintings, because he considered his artwork a forum for protest against African-American mistreatment.
