Unit Overview

To write well about reading, students need to learn more not only about writing but also about reading.

Throughout this unit you will teach students ways writers read complex text closely and then write about the literature they are reading. You will teach children to notice authors' choices about the setting, objects, words, metaphors, and characters they use in their texts. Students will write structured, compelling essays in which they make and support claims and analyze, unpack, and incorporate evidence. Students focus on arguing for their ideas about characters while carrying forward what they have been taught about planning and drafting essays, writing introductions and conclusions, and marshaling evidence in support of reasons. Students will draft both handwritten pieces as well as pieces using appropriate technology.

Teaching Points and Suggested Activities

The following teaching points and activities are adapted from Units of Study, Literary Essay, Grade 4 (Calkins et al., 2014) and serve as a loose framework for teachers, who will add and or emphasize based on their students' needs.

Teaching Points

- teach students that reading with an attentiveness to detail can spark ideas and that writing can be a vehicle for developing those ideas.
- teach students that experts know that certain aspects of their subjects merit special attention. Literary essayists know it pays off, for example, to study characters.
- teach students one way writers elaborate on their ideas- using simple prompts.
- teach students that writers select ideas to craft into theses. Show ways writers question and revise their theses, making sure these are supported by the whole text.
- teach students ways that essayists select mini-stories as evidence to support their ideas.
- teach students that writers use direct quotes to support their claims about a text. Teach them ways writers are discerning, choosing only the quotes that best support their ideas.
- teach students that writers not only use stories and quotes as evidence, they also use lists to support their claims.
- teach students some of the ways that writers create drafts out of collections of evidence. Teach children ways to study published literary essays to find structures for their own literary essays.
- teach students that writers seek out patterns in their books or short stories, using those patterns to develop ideas about the story's theme or message.
- teach students that essayists look at all sides of a text and form complex ideas, adding depth to their writing.
- teach students that essayists flash-draft essays, getting their thoughts down quickly on paper so they can revise later.
- teach students that essayists think carefully about their introductions and conclusions, giving readers the larger context for their claim in their introduction and leaving their readers with something to think about in their conclusion.
- teach students that writers find evidence to support their claims by studying the choices authors make in their texts.
- teach students that essayists notice the similarities and differences between texts and categorize their observations into patterns or ideas, in preparation to write a compare-and-contrast essay.
- teach students that essayists write compare-and-contrast essays by looking at similar themes across texts, or similar characters, and naming how the texts approach the themes differently or how the characters are similar and different.
- teach students that writers elaborate on each of their distinct, individual supporting ideas, ensuring they have developed their essay with enough evidence for their claim.
- teach students that writers get their essays ready for the world by carefully checking their spelling, punctuation, and other conventions.
- teach students that writers work on their craft and development by incorporating figurative language, dialogue, and other writing risks
- teach students that when writing about reading authors often choose specific words and phrases to convey their ideas to the reader

- remind students to enhance their writing by choosing punctuation for effect
- teach students that authors know when to use formal and informal English in their writing based on its context

Activities to Support Teaching Points

- create and refer to anchor charts

- explore and try a variety of leads and endings
- practice creating mental movies and acting out a story in order to make writing come alive
- use figurative language and sparkle words to improve descriptions of character and setting
- add dialog to writing to bring characters alive
- set mini-writing goals as you move through the writing process
- provide checklists to assess and develop on-going writing goals
- write long and strong to build stamina
- teach that sentences are used to group one idea and paragraphs are used to group similar ideas
- plan to celebrate the conclusion of classroom writing projects
- use technology to research information about a specific topic
- use technology to publish a piece of writing

Assessments

Assessment in this unit takes three forms: diagnostic, formative, and summative. Assessment rubrics are available in Lucy Calkins' Reading and Writing Project resource kits, but teachers may also develop their own rubrics in order to include more specific elements of knowledge and skills listed in this unit summary.

Student self-assessment and peer assessment should take place whenever possible--again, in all three forms: diagnostic, formative, and summative. Removing the traditional emphasis on teacher assessment enables students to take more initiative and become self-directed.

On-going teacher assessment will take place in the context of a conference. Conferences, both small group and one-to-one conferring, are used to reinforce expectations, provide advice and/or assistance, and ultimately, to support growth.

Diagnostic Assessments

On-Demand Performance Assessment Prompt: Literary Essay (E.g. "Think of a text that you know and care about, a text which you have strong feelings. Tomorrow, you will have forty-five minutes to write an opinion or argument text in which you will write your opinion or claim and tell reasons why you feel that way. When you do this, draw on everything you know about literary essays or essays in general. If you want to bring in the text you'll write about, you may bring that with you tomorrow. Please keep in mind that you'll have forty-five minutes to complete this, so you will need to plan, draft, revise, and edit in one sitting. In your writing, make sure you:

- Write an introduction.
- State your opinion or claim.
- Give reasons and evidence.
- Organize your writing.
- Acknowledge counterclaims.
- Use transition words.
- Write a conclusion." - Taken from Writing Pathways: Performance Assessments and Learning Progressions, K-5)

Formative Assessments (Informal)

Daily observation of students' participation during the active engagement segment of each mini-lesson.

Students' conversation with partners during Turn and Talk segment of mini-lessons.

Comments, corrections, and records from peer conferences between students.

Observation of daily writing progress in writing notebooks and/or folders.

Formative Assessments (Formal)

Teacher-student conferences

Summative Assessment

Summative writing will take the form of both handwritten pieces and pieces generated using appropriate technology.

Activities to Differentiate Instruction

Note: these strategies can be adapted to scaffold for students needing more support or extending the learning for higher level students.

- provide support as needed during individual teaching sessions
- provide feedback in small group setting
- provide personal copies of teaching charts
- provide modified and/or alternate grade level checklists and rubrics
- provide modified writing paper
- provide appropriate writer partners

Challenge gifted students to incorporate more complex writing techniques in each story based on the 5th grade writing learning progression:

- Students will make a claim or thesis on a topic or text, support it with reasons, and provide a variety of evidence for each reason.
- Students will try to find a deeper meaning in the text and analyze the author's purpose.
- Students will provide a response that is fully sustained and consistently and purposefully focused: opinion is clearly stated, focused, and strongly maintained and the opinion is communicated clearly within the context.
- Students will provide a response that has a clear and effective organizational structure creating unity and completeness.
- Students will provide a thorough and convincing response that provides support/evidence for the writer's opinion that includes the effective use of examples and details.
- Students will respond clearly and effectively by expressing ideas and using precise language.
- Students will provide a response that demonstrates a strong command of conventions: few, if any, errors in usage and sentence formation, effective and consistent use of punctuation, capitalization, and spelling.
