Enduring Understandings

Imagery is created when writers envoke the five senses and interpret the world around them through the sense of sight, hearing, taste, touch and smell.

Imagery is one of the most needed elements by creative writers.

Vibrant images arise through the use of metaphors and similes which push the reader to a deeper level of understanding.

Creative writers should avoid the use of abstract feelings and ideas.

Images awaken our senses and allow us to experience what the writer has written.

Essential Questions

How do I create images?

Why should I create images?

What can I create by utilizing effective similes and metaphors?

What should writers avoid in their creative works?

How can an image be a doorway into a poem?

Knowledge and Skills

Students will learn the following:

An image is a picture created by our words.

Images are created through the use of metaphors and similes.

A metaphor is a comparison that says one thing is another.

There are two types of metaphors: the implied metaphor and the extended metaphor. An implied metaphor implies the comparison, usually through action or by ascribing attributes. The extended metaphor persists throughout an entire creative piece.

A simile is a comparison that uses the words like or as.

Another important element of metaphor is personification, which is giving a nonhuman object some human characteristic.

Cliches, phrases or images that are so commonly used that they are not original should be avoided.

Abstract words can be used to generate vivid images by choosing an image to illustrate that abstract concept.

An image conveys emotion and can be a doorway into a poem. It can work on an emotional level even before we're able to intellectually understand it.

Students will be able to do the following:

Write poems and short stories that include strong images.

Use metaphors and similes to create vibrant images.

Write fresh, original pieces without cliches.

Use abstract words to generate vivid images.

Trust their instincts and follow where an image leads.

From The Practice of Creative Writing by Heather Sellers

Transfer Goals

Students will independently be able to understand how to use original vivid and vibrant imagery and apply that knowledge to their creative works by carefully examining the text.

Students will independently be able to understand how to ellicit the five senses and apply that knowledge to their creative writing by using real life evidence to support their work.
