Unit Summary

In this unit the students will learn the last syllable pattern and the final stable syllable. This type of syllable is only found at the end of multisyllabic words, and has little variation (unlike all other syllable types). The consonant -le pattern is the final stable syllable. This syllable always has a consonant, then the letters l and e. The e is silent. The gle in bulge is an example of this syllable type. Students will learn how to mark this. Students will learn final stable syllable pattern with the welded sounds: tion, sion. The final stable syllable with welded sounds sion and tion are actually noun-forming suffixes. These suffixes are added to basewords and roots in unusual ways, so students will learn how to spell these words by syllable, rather than with spelling rules applied from the baseword.
