

Unit 4: Reading and Writing Nonfiction

Content Area: English Language Arts
Course(s): Language Arts 4
Time Period: January
Length: 6 Weeks
Status: Published

Unit Summary

During this unit, students will learn that reading nonfiction is about jumping wholeheartedly into the depth of a text; reading the book cover to cover and uncovering the bigger ideas. Readers see more than just random details and know that there are multiple ideas within any one text and those ideas are often interconnected; and that there are key details that support those ideas. Readers hold onto what they learn and carry it with them to new experiences. Readers can share what they learn and teach information to others. As they are learning about the nuance of information writing, students will brainstorm ideas and begin researching for their own non-fiction picture books. Students will learn that writers of nonfiction don't just rely on text features to organize their facts and information. They also organize their words: they use compare/contrast, pro/con, and cause and effect structures to help the reader really understand the content. Writers of nonfiction engage their readers by knowing what age group will be reading their book.

Standards
