Enduring Understanding

Please add your Enduring Understandings by clicking on the Lists tab above.

- A pronoun takes the place of a noun or nouns. It must agree with the noun it replaces.
- A realistic story is a made-up story that could happen in real life. It has characters, a setting, and a plot with a beginning, middle, and end. It may include dialogue with quotation marks to show what each character says. The purpose of writing a realistic narrative story is to entertain.
- Good writers use dialogue to show the actual words that characters say in a conversation. Dialogue shows what the characters are like. Writers also use dialogue to show the reader what is happening in a story rather than just telling the reader what is happening. Quotation marks are used at the beginning and end of what a character says.
- Many stories have one or more characters who have a problem they need to solve. The problem is something they want to change, fix, or figure out. Characters work to find a solution, or a way to solve the problem.
- One way to summarize a selection is to think about author's purpose. Understanding the author's reason for writing helps you evaluate and make judgments about what you read. An author may write to teach you something, to tell a story, or to try to get you to think in a certain way.
- When you summarize a selection, you take the most important ideas and restate them in your own words. Good readers summarize what they read to help them identify a selection's main idea and important details.
- When you visualize, you try to picture in your mind what you have read. As you read, stop and describe the pictures in your mind. If you can visualize what you have read, you will understand the story better.
