Essential Questions

- How can we learn about our country's history?
- How do you think life in early days of North America was different from the way it is now?
- What are settlers?

- What are some ways Columbus's trip changed the world forever?
- What are some ways you can learn about the past?
- What is a time line and how can it be like a story?
- Why do you think people want to learn about their past?
- Why do you think we still celebrate Thanksgiving today?

Enduring Understanding

- A time line shows orders of things that happened and can tell about a beginning, middle, and end, or what happened first, next, last (like a story).
- Columbus's trip helped people in Europe learn about North America and Columbus's trip changed the life of Native Americans such as the Taino by bringing Europeans to their land.
- Different: There were no cars; cities were smaller; people dressed differently. Same: People still worked, went to school, raised families, and shopped.
- Learning about your past and the people you are connected with makes you proud of your heritage.
- Settlers are people who move from one place to live in a different place.
- We can visit historical places, read about history in books, see films, go to museums, or learn history from listening to others.
- We want to remember the Pilgrims and Native Americans who are an important part of our history; we want to give thanks for everything that is good in our own lives.
- You can learn about the past from stories told by adults, photographs, home videos, personal memories, baby books, and growth charts.
