Unit Overview

Unit 3 allows students to increase their descriptive prowess as they continue to write in the narrative, specifically, the memoir. These memoirs will be rooted in narration and description. The class will examine what it means to recount a significant episode in life so as to see the importance of reflecting on and making sense of those episodes. Students will search for memoirs, bring them to class, and share in small groups. Teachers will also choose and present exemplars for students to mirror in original works. Descriptive lessons taught in this unit build upon lessons taught in units 1 and 2, focusing on concrete details, figurative language, and dialogue. Students will continue writing in journals spontaneously as well as responding to assignments through various modes of communication. Young writers will participate in all phases of writing learned in previous units. Here, all will come to the realization that reflecting on memories affords human beings to ask, "How has this changed me?' "Why am I the person I am today?" "Why was this even a turning point in my life?" "What has caused me to think the I do?" Students will also learn memoirs can be written at any point in life whereas autobiographies are full accounts of a life typically written later on in life. The unit ends with students choosing one memoir to polish and add to the portfolio. Students should also add a letter to the portfolio addressed to themselves or the teacher, explaining how they have grown as authors in this genre, and perhaps what they have learned about themselves.

Enduring Understanding

Students will understand that narrative writing is a genre rooted in personal experiences and that the purpose of narrative writing is to thoughtfully reflect on, question, and critique those experiences.

Students will understand that the modes of narration and description are necessary, useful devices in all genres of writing.

Narrative writing enables people to express and record real life stories/moments, and share their knowledge and cultural values to readers around the world

Different forms of writing are appropriate for different purposes and audiences and have different features (e.g., personal narrative, informational reports/articles, poetry, response to text).

To be effective, writing must be a sufficiently developed, coherent unit of thought to address the needs of the intended audience.

Writing and sharing can be used to make meaning of one's own experience, as well as of other information/ ideas.

Writing is a reflective process.

Essential Questions

How do authors concretely describe action, conflict, character, and setting?

How do authors use dialogue to express personality and emotion and further conflict?
How do authors use figurative language to deepen description and add flair to writing?

What is the effect of narrative writing for authors and readers?

Exit Skills

To demonstrate self-awareness

Write regularly, spontaneously, and with ease to express personal values

To use concise vocabulary to impart emotion, imagery, and meaning such as proper nouns, precise adjectives, and action verbs

To write purposeful dialogue

How to write for specific audiences

To synthesize lessons from previous units to craft coherent, moving narratives
