Unit Overview

In the age of Information, our student must learn how to find and discriminate between what is reliable and what is unreliable information. In Unit 3 - Using and Understanding Resources the learner will learn that credible, well-chosen resources are the cornerstone of a well-written research paper. They will learn about the different types of resources (Primary, Secondary, Tertiary Sources), selecting the best resources for their particular assignment, and evaluating the credibility (5 Criteria-Authority, Accuracy, Currency, Relevance, and Objectivity) of the information they found.

Enduring Understanding

Enduring understanding for Unit 3 -Using and Understanding Resources are:

- Search library resources by choosing keywords and putting them together to get accurate results
- Use advanced search options (i.e. full-text searching, fielded searching, subject/thesaurus searching etc.)

- Understand how Google responds to your search inquiry and breaks down the components of a search results page
- Articulate the differences between books, periodicals, and websites and how to use each when conducting research
- Ask objective questions to evaluate the reliability of a source
- Identify bias within a source
- Recognize the importance of using reliable sources
- Determine an assignment's information need
- Locate different types of library databases
- Identify specific government publications or products
- Define primary, secondary, and tertiary sources, and give examples of each

Essential Questions

How do I find information?

What are the most appropriate resources to meet my needs?

What is the difference between primary and secondary sources?

How can I find reliable sources?

How can I use the Internet to find information and tell if it is reliable?

How do I identify and debunk fake news?

How do I select the best database to suit my research needs?

Do I need to locate government information?

Where would I best find the government information my research requires?

How can I identify diverse perspectives in my sources?

How do I evaluate the information I find online?

Is this information useful?

Why should I use multiple sources?

An effective researcher will ask the following questions:

Who is the author of this source?

- What are his/her academic or professional credentials?
- What else has this author written?
- For what audience does this author typically write?

Who is the publisher of this source?

- What company, journal or website published this source?
- What sort of work does this entity typically publish?
- Who owns, runs, or helps run this entity?
- Does this entity edit or review works before publishing them?

What is the accuracy of the author's ideas?

- Does (s)he cite outside sources when making key arguments?
- Is the author's research methodology clearly stated, if applicable?
- Is the overall structure of his or her argument clear and logical?

What is the accuracy of the source's written presentation?

- Does the source include a well-formatted bibliography (or equivalent)?
- What is the quality and quantity of the works that are cited?
- Does the source contain many spelling or grammatical errors?

When was the source published?

- What if any relevant developments does this publication date precede?
- How old are the works cited by this source?
- If it includes links -- do the links still work, or are they broken?
- Does this source contain any statements or facts that are clearly out of date?

Has this source been updated?

- Does the source indicate that it has been updated or revised since its original release?
- Does the source indicate whether it will continue to be updated in the future?
- By whom is this source updated?

What are the values, views, and biases of this source?

- What are the subjective values of the author and/or publisher of this research?
- Where does the source acknowledge the author and/or publishers' subjective views?
- Was there a sponsor for this research, and if so, what might their biases be?
- Does the author primarily support his/her argument objectively or subjectively?

How will the values, views, and biases of this source affect my research?

- Is the overall level of subjectivity in this source appropriate for my research?
- Are there likely less subjective sources out there that also have its same strengths as this source?

How does this source relate to my research?

- What is the source's thesis and key sub-arguments?
- What is original or important about this source, that makes it distinct from my other sources?
- What aspects of this source's argument are tangential or un-related to my research?

How will using this source affect my research?

- What aspects of this source's argument are in conflict with my thesis?

- What aspects of this source's argument help specifically enhance my thesis?
- Are there likely to be better sources out there than this one, that still serve the same purpose?

Exit Skills

By the end of Grade 9/10, Library Media Unit 3, the student should be able to:

- Understand that research is a process that involves many steps.

- When multiple sources present conflicting information researchers cross-check materials, read, consider, and draw conclusions to resolve discrepancies.
- Identify bias within sources.
