Unit Overview

In this unit students will make the connection between the U.S. Constitution and the criminal justice system. Students will begin to interpret the Constitution and discover the rights of due process of law. Students will study the 4th & 5th Amendments and other basic human rights protections afforded by the Bill of Rights. Students will study landmark U.S. Supreme Court decisions defining our rights and the limits on government power in enforcing the law. Students will analyze legislation and case law on women, racial and ethnic minorities, the LGBTQ community, and individuals with disabilities and how these groups have contributed to the American economy, politics and society. Students will assess the responses of the United States and other nations to the violations of human rights throughout history and comprehend the personal and legal responsibility that each citizen bears to fight racism and hatred whenever and wherever it happens. Students will evaluate the government response to climate change and the effects of global warming on environment.

Enduring Understanding

Patrick Henry said "The Constitution is not an instrument for the government to restrain the people, it is an instrument for the people to restrain the government." With this in mind students will discover the relationship between the U.S. Constitution and the Criminal Justice System (CJS). Students will comprehend issues of due process and police use of force and how the U.S. Constitution protects citizens rights. Students will realize the power of the Constitution as a shield against human rights violations by individuals, businesses or the government. Students will observe the evolution of the CJS as individual, social, and political norms change and observe how courtroom procedure is designed to guarantee equal and fair application of the law. All people have the personal and legal responsibility that each citizen bears to fight racism and hatred whenever and wherever it happens. Appreciation for the various ways women, racial and ethnic minorities, the LGBTQ community, and individuals with disabilities have contributed to the American economy, politics and society. Recognize the responsibilities of the United States and other nations to respond to the violation of human rights that occurred during the Holocaust and other genocides. Recognize the origins of the antislavery movement and the impact of particular events, such as the Amistad decision, on the movement. Evaluate the government response to climate change and the effects of global warming on environment.
