Unit Overview

Illustrator is a vector-based digital imaging program.

Illustrator has many commercial uses, such as creating logos.

Illustrator can be used in combination with Photoshop to create images.

Students will learn to use the pen tool to place anchor points and define paths, which is the basis for vector artwork.

Students will be introduced to the design world as active participants, engaging with its form and content as they research and discuss the design process and solve design problems.

Students will apply their knowledge creatie vector-based digital images.

Enduring Understanding

In Illustrator, vector images are defined by mathematical formulas and algorithms.

Images created using vectors can be enlarged indefinitely without loosing quality.

Illustrator shapes are comprised of Strokes and Fills.

The Pen Tool puts down Anchor Points to create paths which define shapes.

Images can be imported into Illustrator. Copyrighted images cannnot be legally used without permission.

An object must be Selected in order for a tool to have an effect on it. Objects can be Grouped and Ungrouped.

There are many characteristics of Type that determine how text elements are perceived. A message is communicated by these visual characteristics as well as by the meaning of the words themselves.

The effectiveness of a poster or an advertisement depends on identifying a target audience and using design elements that appeal to that audience.

Essential Questions

How do you create logos?

Why don't vector images ever lose quality?

How to Warp and simplify to make primitive shapes cleaner?

How to use Colors, fill, stroke and rearranging objects?

Building irregular shapes from primitives?
Creating reflections using shades and tints?
What is the best way to work more with colors and objects?
Best way to use Rectangular grids for easy control panels.

Exit Skills

By the end of Unit, the student should be able to:

Using Illustrator’s Stroke and Fill funtions to solve design problems.

Creating, editing and combining shapes to create logos using the Pathfinder and other tools in Illustrator.
Importing images from the internet in compliance with legal and ethical guidelines.
Using the pen tool to trace images and to create new images.
Using the scale and align tools to create balanced designs.

Create logos and redraw artwork usung the tracing options.

Students will be able to pass the Adobe Illustrator ACA Certification test through Certiport.
