Unit Overview

This 7-8 week unit delves deeply into character analysis. Students explore another perspective on the topic of generations and what one generation can learn from another. Throughout this unit students will closely read and further explore their perspective about different generation by reading, writing, speaking, listening, and presenting. They will read various nonfiction narratives that focus on generations- from what parents or guardians wish for their children to how people from different generations influence each other- and they will read information text in order to frame their understanding of what one generation can learn from another. Throughout this unit, students will be engaged in a Writer's Workshop framework by focusing on nonfiction narratives. Students continue to hone writing skills by writing an extension to a short story utilizing the 5 elements of literature: theme, plot, setting, point of view, and character. To conclude, in this unit, students analyze the the impact different generations have on each other.

Enduring Understanding

- We must be active readers in order to extract meaning from a text.
- We learn things about ourselves by identifying with real characters in literature.
- People from different generations have different points of view and by getting to know them, they can shape who we are.

- Our experiences with people from different generations can make up who we are today.

Essential Questions

- What can one generation learn from another?
- What does the word generation mean?
- How do other generations shape our identities?
- How can I learn about who I am through other generations?

Exit Skills

By the end of Unit 1 7th ELA students should be able to:

- trace common themes across text and media
- recognize the elements of the short story, novel, non-fiction, biography, poetry
- develop and utilize analytical and metacognitive reading skills
- recognize and analyze how author's style, purpose, tone, point of view, and mood contribute to text effect
- revise rough drafts utilizing self/peer teacher conferencing
- use literature and informational text as support for writing activities
