Suggested Activities & Best Practices

- Debate the importance of establishing the Articles
- Students represent each state and develop their own constitution
- Read the Federalist papers 10 and 13
- Read as a class Alexander Hamilton vs Thomas Jefferson on Popular Rule (1780-1820) and discuss the points of view presented by both sides then split the class into two groups representing the sides of Hamilton and Jefferson and debate the validity of both sides.
- Write an essay comparing and contrasting Federalists and Jeffersonians than a position paper that contains a background essay, a thesis statement, and supporting citations for your conclusion. Debate the positions of the student papers by having the students read the opposing side's argument, which they will defend.
- Read: John Marshall and the Supreme Court, Marshall Sanctions the Bank (1819) then write a short paragraph explaining the position of the court.

- Create two newspapers from the year 1812. One newspaper will reflect the English point of view and the other will represent the United States then present/debate the arguments from each newspaper.
- Long essay: Some historians have described the decade following 1812 as the "Era of Good Feelings." Support, modify, or refute this interpretation, providing specific evidence to justify your answer.
- Create a chart that shows the changes brought on by the Second Great Awakening than an essay taking a position of which part of society was affected the most. Be sure to cover the counter-argument.
