Unit Overview

Public Performance is the capstone for any performing ensemble. Students have the ability to showcase their hard work over the past few months, culminating in an experience that can only be understood through public performance. Concert etiquette will be discussed and practiced to encourage a culture of life long concert attendees. Students will think critically about their performance, both leading up to and after the performance, to encourage awareness of themselves within the ensemble, and the ensemble as a whole. Active listening will encourage students to strive for perfection in their performance. Students will focus on their role in a group; how they should blend, and if or when they should be heard as a solo or section.

Enduring Understanding

- Self-awareness within the group is essential for a successful performance
- Writing about music is a complex yet attainable task
- Critique of other performances will create a level of aspiration
- Critique of one self and of one's group will allow for greater understanding of musical achievement and expression

- There is no greater feeling than during and after a successful performance
