Essential Questions/Enduring Understandings

- How does the meter of a piece of music affect the way it sounds and feels?
- Meter guides the rhythmic structure of a piece.
- Most music is organized into regular groups of beats or rhythmic patterns, that can be counted and felt physically.
- The use of a time signature organizes written music into groups of beats.
- What do I hear when I listen to music?

Students Will Know/Students Will Be Skilled At

- Beats are usually organized into patterns of duple, triple, and quadruple, which can be counted and felt physically.
- Beats can also be subdivided into simple and compound meter.
- How to determine the meter of the piece of music from listening or from looking at notation.
- Musical time is measured in beats. The speed at which those beats occur is tempo.
- Performing in simple and compound meter.
- The way in which beats are organized is called meter in music.
- Time signatures organize the meter and beats into measures of musical notation for a performer. Bar lines separate each measure.

Learning Plan

- Preview the essential questions and return to them throughout the course, in discussion and written assignments.
- Students perform a written rhythmic example via clapping, singing, or counting.
- Students will be asked to perform from simple rhythmic notation (lines and dashes, and then note heads) of duple, triple and quadruple.
- Students will listen to musical examples, both recorded and live, and determine if the music represents duple, triple or quadruple patterns.
- Students will use time signatures to create their own musical rhythmic phrases.

Evidence/Performance Tasks

Performing Arts students demonstrate differentiated proficiency according to their ability to answer the essential questions through formative and summative assessments. Evidence of progression may be demonstrated in divergent ways through the Artistic Processes of Creating, Performing/Presenting/Producing, Connecting, and Responding.

- From listening to musical examples students will be able to identify performed music as having the quality of duple, triple or quadruple.
- Students will begin to write in rhythmic notation applying time signature, and accurately fitting the notation into a measure.
- Students will perform from rhythmic notation patterns of duple, triple or quadruple.
- Students will use given time signatures to create their own rhythmic patterns.
- Students will write down simple rhythmic notation of performed rhythmic patterns.
