Enduring Understandings

- We can manipulate many elements of our voice, including volume and pitch
- We can manipulate many elements of our bodies, including height and speed
- People, or an audience, will perceive a loud, fast character differently than a quiet, slow character

Students Will Know/ Students Will be Skilled At

Students will know:

- Ways to manipulate their voice to enhance a story
- Ways to manipulate their bodies to enhance a story
- Which options are more fitting for a particular character

Students will be skilled at:

- Using volume and pitch to differentiate between characters
- Using speed and height to differentiate between characters

- Making creative choices while planning a character to ensure the audience understands who they are

Learning Plan

- Discuss essential questions
- Create a list of animals based on volume - loudest animals to quietest animals
- Play a game where students move around the space; call out an animal from the list; adjust volume based on that animal
- Introduce the concept of pitch - high/low and/or high/deep
- Repeat exercises with pitch layered in
- Discuss relationship between volume and pitch - Is it easier to be loud and deep or loud and high?
- Repeat animal list with size - largest animals to smallest
- Repeat game- calling out animals from the list; students make themselves as big or as small as the animal
- Split the class in half and have half the class freestyle, maintaining one volume and one size while the other half watches, then split
- Discuss what the audience saw - what did they notice? What did they think their classmates were doing? Why did they think that?

Evidence/ Performance Tasks

Fine and Performing Arts students demonstrate differentiated proficiency according to their ability to answer the essential questions through formative and summative assessments. Evidence of progression may be demonstrated in divergent ways through the Artistic Processes of Creating, Performing/ Presenting/ Producing, Connecting, and Responding.

- Discussion of essential questions
- Observation of understanding through list making and games
- Discussion and demonstration of volume and size
- Accuracy of following the rules of the game

- Use of freestyle time
- Turn and talk
- Student explanation of what happened
- Independence assessed by grade level

Materials

The materials used in this course allow for integration of a variety of instructional, supplemental, and intervention materials that support student learners at all levels in the school and home environments. Associated web content and media sources are infused into the unit as applicable and available.
