

Unit 7 - Launching the New Government / The Early Republic

Content Area: Social Studies
Course(s): United States History I
Time Period: 5 weeks
Length: April-May
Status: Published

Unit Overview

Unit 9 initially focuses on Washington's Administration and the difficulties he faced as President, such as building a strong government and economy. It also focuses on Washington's neutrality during the French Revolution and his warning that America should stay out of European affairs once he left office. Additionally, the political spectrum in the United States evolves into two parties: Federalist and Democratic Republican, lead by Adams and Jefferson respectively. Finally, Adams' presidency is explored and while his actions did help the United States stay out of war he became very unpopular and lost to Jefferson in the election of 1800.

Transfer

Students will be able to independently use their learning to...

- Understand what challenges a president faces and what he does to maintain a strong government and economy.

- Students will also be able to question whether or not a war or American intervention in other nations affairs will help or hinder the country.

- Detect bias or slander when it comes to political campaigning. Study of the first true election, between Adams and Jefferson, shows the ugly side of politics and how to sift through truth and lies.

- Finally, students will see that making the right choices not always gains a person popularity, just as in Adams case of staying out of the French Revolution.
