Content Area: Social Studies
Course(s): Generic Course
Time Period: 4 weeks
Length: June
Status: Published

Unit Overview

The South had a more difficult time recovering from the Civil War than the North. Lincoln's Reconstruction plan met with some resistance. Andrew Johnson became president after Lincoln's assassination. The South's black codes restricted the rights of freed African Americans. Congress responded by passing harsh Reconstruction measures. President Johnson survived an impeachment attempt. Southern and northern groups competed to control the South in the postwar period. The effort to rebuild the South created a cycle of poverty that affected freed African Americans and poor whites. Reconstruction did little to improve the condition of free African Americans. However new industries helped to improve the economy of the South.
