Unit5

Government Leaders: Then and Now - Students read a book about government leaders. They compare and contrast the different levels of government. They write about new laws and why we should have them. They give short oral presentations, and then they use coordinating conjunctions to create compound sentences.

Barbara Jordan: Political Pioneer- Students read a text about Barbara Jordan. They describe her accomplishments and write dedication speeches for monuments that they design. They create and perform skits, and then they use connecting words to put events in order.

Eleanor Roosevelt- Students read a biography of Eleanor Roosevelt. They identify ways that she helped people and the obstacles she faced. They write about how life would be different if she had not fought for her beliefs. They give arguments in a debate, and then they practice using the simple past tense.

Tammy Duckworth: Fighter for Others- Students read a text about Tammy Duckworth. They identify details and answer questions about the text. Students write about a time they helped someone. They use modal statements, and then they practice using prepositions.

Unit6

Bikes and Boards- Students read a book about the forces at work in different sports. They identify different forces. They write about the forces at work in a sport of their choosing. They actively listen to oral presentations, and then they identify and use adverbs.

The Quest for Speed: Vehicles- Students read a book about the history and science of vehicles. They identify forces acting on vehicles and objects. They write about how forces affect their everyday lives. Students discuss different types of vehicles, and then they use subordinating conjunctions to create complex sentences.

Roberto Clemente- Students read a biography about Roberto Clemente. They identify important events in his life. Students write about one of their own goals. They try to persuade others in conversations, and then they practice using creating precise and detailed sentences.

Money Isn't Everything or Is It? - Students read a text about how baseball teams are created. They use reasons and evidence to support arguments. They write about how to reduce the cost of an activity. They support their opinions in conversation, and then they practice using modal verbs.
