Unit Introduction

This final unit of World History will look at the challenges facing the human civilization in the most recent past. Major events in modern Asia and the Middle East will be used to highlight lingering political, economic, and religious tensions. Much of the unit will be understood through the consequences of two world wars and the Cold War. Communist revolutions in China, the Korean War, the Arab-Israeli Conflict, and the Iranian Revolution will serve as case studies in these new challenges. Finally, consequences and responses to globalization will finish the course.
