

Unit 5 - The Individual and the Law & The Economy and the Individual

Content Area: Social Studies
Course(s):
Time Period: Full Year
Length: Full Year
Status: Published

Unit Overview

We as a nation are governed by the rule of law which is the very heart of our democracy. Laws are important because they provide a list of rules by which a society must abide. Without laws individuals would have to protect their property and life on their own. Laws protect people who want to be productive citizens of a community. Economics is the way a society organizes the production and consumption of goods and services. It affects decisions made by individuals and by governments with regards to wants and needs.

Enduring Understandings

Laws are fair when all people in similar situations are treated equally.

A good law is fair, reasonable understandable, and enforceable.

Wants are things we would like to have to make life more comfortable and enjoyable while needs are required for survival (food, clothing, shelter).

Cost-benefit analysis will help producers determine how much and for whom to produce as well as answer other economic questions.
