Rationale & Transfer Goals

This unit is primarily concerned with English colonization of North America, although it is important to frame the study in the context of the Americas as a whole. From a theoretical perspective, the teacher should help the students to understand the differences between colonialism and imperialism. The North American colonies should be classified as colonies of exploitation and settlement, whereas those in the Caribbean were colonies of exploitation (overseers and absentee landlords). Students should understand the violence of the colonial experience as many indigenous peoples were killed and others divested of their land and forced to serve the colonizers.

Enduring Understandings

Beginning in the early 17th century, English colonists enslaved African peoples. Slavery eventually became the economic engine of the majority of colonies. Slaves' increasingly important roles in the colonies must be addressed. Students should appreciate that free, wage labor co-existed with coercive forms of labor such as slavery and indentured servitude. They should understand the differences between indentured servitude in all thirteen colonies and slavery.

Essential Questions

Why did the plantation system dominate the economy of the Southern colonies?

- What explains the nascent industrialization in the North?
- What were the social and economic ramifications of these variations?
- How did American Indians structure their economies?

Content- What students will know

Enslaved Africans were instrumental in the success of Jamestown as a European colony in America, the colony flourished because of tobacco farming (a cash crop)

- How to identify the role of the following people in relation to the development and perception of Jamestown as a settlement: John Rolfe, Captain John Smith, Chief Powhatan, Pocahontas, John Punch, and Anthony Johnson.

Skills- What students will be able to do

- Define vocabulary words and write sentence descriptors
- Look up and understand the role of important people involved with Jamestown
- Discuss importance of cash crops and which were most popular in Jamestown colony
- Read and describe primary sources regarding content

Instructional Activities - How we teach content and skills

- Use the Integration Plan to introduce the lesson on “taxation without representation” Ask the students if the statement is valid, and what they think the phrase means.
- Give students a list of the following monarchical implementations to research: the Sugar Act, Stamp Act, Townshend Acts, Declaratory Act, Coercive Acts, the Quebec Act, etc.
- Have students participate in a mock trial where King George III is accused of violating the unalienable rights of the colonists. Briefly explain the meaning of unalienable to prep for a future lesson on the Declaration of Independence.
- Students should have researched the monarchical implementations. They can be used as witnesses to testify during the mock trial and to explain how these acts violated their rights.

- During the trial, the defense should call upon African Americans to argue that the treatment of the Africans/African Americans makes the colonists worse than the king.
- One witness for the defense should be Abigail Adams who wrote to her husband John, “It always appeared a most iniquitous scheme to me to fight ourselves for what we are daily robbing and plundering from those who have as good a right to freedom as we have.”
- Alternate learning activity would be to place both the king and the colonists on trial for their violations of civil liberties.

Evidence/Assessment - How we know students have learned

- project rubric
- quiz on the information
- class participation
- formal test
- Have the students create a diary from the perspective of their assigned individual. The diary must contain three, two-page entries describing his or her perception of the environment of Jamestown, the European colonists, the natives of the land, the way he or she treated others, and the way he or she is treated.
